Paula Musich

Research Director, Security and Risk Management

Paula brings over 30 years of experience covering the IT security and networking technology markets. She has been an IT security analyst for over nine years, most recently as a research director at NSS Labs, and earlier as principal analyst for enterprise security for Current Analysis. As a security technology analyst Paula has tracked and analyzed competitive developments in the threat management segment of the information security market, ranging from advanced anti-malware to next generation firewalls and intrusion prevention systems to content security, data loss prevention and more.

Prior to becoming an analyst, Paula led a 20+ year career as a well-regarded technology journalist. She served as a senior editor and writer at eWeek, PC Week, and Network World, winning the prestigious Gold Award for News Analysis, American Society of Business Publication Editors.

M.S., Public Relations, Boston University

B.A., Journalism & Mass Communication, University of Wisconsin

“My desire to grasp the big picture and see how all the pieces fit together served me well as a technology journalist. Asking probing questions and really listening to the answers comes naturally to me. As an IT security analyst, those same traits allow me to more effectively serve our clients.”
